They work tirelessly on on selling but continuously are met with failure. One day a new kiosk appears, shiny and almost alien looking the two look in awe at the kiosk as its flamboyant owner appears and opens his kiosk. The two stare in awe as his tip jar grow full and the constant ring of the cash register fills the store. After the day ends the two approach the stranger and ask how he was able to succeed so effortlessly. The stranger glances at their stand and smiles and begins telling a grandiose story which the two eagerly take in. Upon its completion they thank the stranger and return to the HQ (gamin castle) and plan their campaign to acquire the ingredients as the stranger described and succeed. Andrew has his doubt and brings up concerns about the plan only for Jim to resolve the problems simply and with very minimal thought or effort. Andrew is nervous and doesnt think its a good Idea. Eventually with enough coercion the two agree to start the quest. In doing so they get geared up in Larp gear and search for the ingredients each challenge building on there weaknesses and helping them to overcome their internal issues. As they approach the final ingredient a colossal failure end up ruining their plan and leaves them back at square one. They both turn on each other and voice how terrible the other is. Jim fails as he constantly goes in guns blazing and end up never accomplishing anything. After taking time to think on there failures they both try to call each other at the same time and both awkwardly apologize and go back to working together.
